Proportional Representation
—No. 3—

Having in preceding articles referred to the importance of representation in our public bodies which are the great power in the government, and the methods which are proposed by Representative Representation for securing their honest action, it is now proposed to give a few examples of the results of P.R. has been put to practice.

The first of the three elections, namely, of the English, Scotch and Irish, were combined into one constituency electing two members. The election was conducted under the P.R. method, and the results were as follows: English, 1900, 366; Scotch, 366; Irish, 366. The results were as follows: English, 1900, 366; Scotch, 366; Irish, 366.

With a small vote polled at 1900, and with new candidates in 1901, the necessary steps to secure a change were taken. The results were as follows: English, 1901, 366; Scotch, 366; Irish, 366. The results were as follows: English, 1901, 366; Scotch, 366; Irish, 366.

While one candidate was elected, not one of the other three was elected. The lowest on the list was elected. The results were as follows: English, 1901, 366; Scotch, 366; Irish, 366. The results were as follows: English, 1901, 366; Scotch, 366; Irish, 366.

It is in this sense that all groups of citizens should be represented. The results were as follows: English, 1901, 366; Scotch, 366; Irish, 366. The results were as follows: English, 1901, 366; Scotch, 366; Irish, 366.
